Have you seen Spring?

I'm sure you have noticed that the weather has been a bit strange this year. The plants and the creatures I photograph are a bit confused. It seemed like such a long wait to see my frog and dragonfly friends, but they are finally out. I have been thinking about how much I rely on spring to lift my mood, especially after a cold winter. Below are a couple of shots of being in nasturtium flower in my garden. There is something [peaceful about seeing bees at work!

'Diving in'

'Straight to the heart'

Through a different lens

Recently I bought a new camera. Unlike all my previous cameras, it doesn't fit in my pocket! It is a Canon EOS RP mirrorless camera, which basically means it is a pretty good camera, suitable for the macro (close up), landscape photography, pet photography and event photography, that I need it for. Sometimes people have seen my photos and said, "You must have a great camera!"

They were shocked when I pulled a small, compact camera out of my pocket. This new camera won't improve the creative qualities of my photos. That is my job. At the moment it feels a little awkward having a larger camera hanging around my neck, but I am learning to like it and to see that it doesn't have the same limitations as my old camera. I feel like an artist using a new medium.
